suspended particles in the air will be blocked outside, thereby playing the role of filtering and purifying the air. It can effectively filter particles of 0.3 microns in the air. The filtering effect on particles  $\geq 0.3\mu\text{m}$  can reach 99.9%, and the filtering effect on PM<sub>0.1</sub> particles can reach 99.99.

The higher the grade of the Hep a filter, the better the filtering effect. Generally, air purifiers on the market use filter elements of grades H12 and H13.

Hep a filters can also be combined with other filtration technologies, such as activated carbon filtration, to improve
